

It was a misty evening at Hogwarts when Harry Potter noticed a peculiar glow coming from the Forbidden Forest. With Hedwig perched silently on his shoulder and his wand gripped tightly in his hand, he ventured out into the shadows. Each step brought a whisper of ancient magic, as if the trees themselves were alive and watching. Hermione and Ron had warned him not to go alone, but Harry's scar had burned with such intensity, he knew something-or someone-was calling him. Deeper into the forest he walked, until he stumbled upon a stone altar glowing with runes. A voice echoed: 'The heir of Merlin returns.' Before Harry could react, a burst of silver light enveloped him. When he awoke, he was no longer in his time, but in the age of the founders of Hogwarts. There stood Godric Gryffindor himself, blade in hand, smiling. 'We've been expecting you, Harry Potter.'

It was a misty evening at Hogwarts when Harry Potter noticed a peculiar glow coming from the Forbidden Forest. With Hedwig perched silently on his shoulder and his wand gripped tightly in his hand, he ventured out into the shadows. Each step brought a whisper of ancient magic, as if the trees themselves were alive and watching. Hermione and Ron had warned him not to go alone, but Harry's scar had burned with such intensity, he knew something-or someone-was calling him. Deeper into the forest he walked, until he stumbled upon a stone altar glowing with runes. A voice echoed: 'The heir of Merlin returns.' Before Harry could react, a burst of silver light enveloped him. When he awoke, he was no longer in his time, but in the age of the founders of Hogwarts. There stood Godric Gryffindor himself, blade in hand, smiling. 'We've been expecting you, Harry Potter.'

It was a misty evening at Hogwarts when Harry Potter noticed a peculiar glow coming from the Forbidden Forest. With Hedwig perched silently on his shoulder and his wand gripped tightly in his hand, he ventured out into the shadows. Each step brought a whisper of ancient magic, as if the trees themselves were alive and watching. Hermione and Ron had warned him not to go alone, but Harry's scar had burned with such intensity, he knew something-or someone-was calling him. Deeper into the forest he walked, until he stumbled upon a stone altar glowing with runes. A voice echoed: 'The heir of Merlin returns.' Before Harry could react, a burst of silver light enveloped him. When he awoke, he was no longer in his time, but in the age of the founders of Hogwarts. There stood Godric Gryffindor himself, blade in hand, smiling. 'We've been expecting you, Harry Potter.'

It was a misty evening at Hogwarts when Harry Potter noticed a peculiar glow coming from the Forbidden Forest. With Hedwig perched silently on his shoulder and his wand gripped tightly in his hand, he ventured out into the shadows. Each step brought a whisper of ancient magic, as if the trees themselves were alive and watching. Hermione and Ron had warned him not to go alone, but Harry's scar had burned with such intensity, he knew something-or someone-was calling him. Deeper into the forest he walked, until he stumbled upon a stone altar glowing with runes. A voice echoed: 'The heir of Merlin returns.' Before Harry could react, a burst of silver light enveloped him. When he awoke, he was no longer in his time, but in the age of the founders of Hogwarts. There stood Godric Gryffindor himself, blade in hand, smiling. 'We've been expecting you, Harry Potter.'

It was a misty evening at Hogwarts when Harry Potter noticed a peculiar glow coming from the Forbidden Forest. With Hedwig perched silently on his shoulder and his wand gripped tightly in his hand, he ventured out into the shadows. Each step brought a whisper of ancient magic, as if the trees themselves were alive and watching. Hermione and Ron had warned him not to go alone, but Harry's scar had burned with such intensity, he knew something-or someone-was calling him. Deeper into the forest he walked, until he stumbled upon a stone altar glowing with runes. A voice echoed: 'The heir of Merlin returns.' Before Harry could react, a burst of silver light enveloped him. When he awoke, he was no longer in his time, but in the age of the founders of Hogwarts. There stood Godric Gryffindor himself, blade in hand, smiling. 'We've been expecting you, Harry Potter.'

It was a misty evening at Hogwarts when Harry Potter noticed a peculiar glow coming from the Forbidden Forest. With Hedwig perched silently on his shoulder and his wand gripped tightly in his hand, he ventured out into the shadows. Each step brought a whisper of ancient magic, as if the trees themselves were alive and watching. Hermione and Ron had warned him not to go alone, but Harry's scar had burned with such intensity, he knew something-or someone-was calling him. Deeper into the forest he walked, until he stumbled upon a stone altar glowing with runes. A voice echoed: 'The heir of Merlin returns.' Before Harry could react, a burst of silver light enveloped him. When he awoke, he was no longer in his time, but in the age of the founders of Hogwarts. There stood Godric Gryffindor himself, blade in hand, smiling. 'We've been expecting you, Harry Potter.'

It was a misty evening at Hogwarts when Harry Potter noticed a peculiar glow coming from the Forbidden Forest. With Hedwig perched silently on his shoulder and his wand gripped tightly in his hand, he ventured out into the shadows. Each step brought a whisper of ancient magic, as if the trees themselves were alive and watching. Hermione and Ron had warned him not to go alone, but Harry's scar had burned with such intensity, he knew something-or someone-was calling him. Deeper into the forest he walked, until he stumbled upon a stone altar glowing with runes. A voice echoed: 'The heir of Merlin returns.' Before Harry could react, a burst of silver light enveloped him. When he awoke, he was no longer in his time, but in the age of the founders of Hogwarts. There stood Godric Gryffindor himself, blade in hand, smiling. 'We've been expecting you, Harry Potter.'

It was a misty evening at Hogwarts when Harry Potter noticed a peculiar glow coming from the Forbidden Forest. With Hedwig perched silently on his shoulder and his wand gripped tightly in his hand, he ventured out into the shadows. Each step brought a whisper of ancient magic, as if the trees themselves were alive and watching. Hermione and Ron had warned him not to go alone, but Harry's scar had burned with such intensity, he knew something-or someone-was calling him. Deeper into the forest he walked, until he stumbled upon a stone altar glowing with runes. A voice echoed: 'The heir of Merlin returns.' Before Harry could react, a burst of silver light enveloped him. When he awoke, he was no longer in his time, but in the age of the founders of Hogwarts. There stood Godric Gryffindor himself, blade in hand, smiling. 'We've been expecting you, Harry Potter.'

It was a misty evening at Hogwarts when Harry Potter noticed a peculiar glow coming from the Forbidden Forest. With Hedwig perched silently on his shoulder and his wand gripped tightly in his hand, he ventured out into the shadows. Each step brought a whisper of ancient magic, as if the trees themselves were alive and watching. Hermione and Ron had warned him not to go alone, but Harry's scar had burned with such intensity, he knew something-or someone-was calling him. Deeper into the forest he walked, until he stumbled upon a stone altar glowing with runes. A voice echoed: 'The heir of Merlin returns.' Before Harry could react, a burst of silver light enveloped him. When he awoke, he was no longer in his time, but in the age of the founders of Hogwarts. There stood Godric Gryffindor himself, blade in hand, smiling. 'We've been expecting you, Harry Potter.'

It was a misty evening at Hogwarts when Harry Potter noticed a peculiar glow coming from the Forbidden Forest. With Hedwig perched silently on his shoulder and his wand gripped tightly in his hand, he ventured out into the shadows. Each step brought a whisper of ancient magic, as if the trees themselves were alive and watching. Hermione and Ron had warned him not to go alone, but Harry's scar had burned with such intensity, he knew something-or someone-was calling him. Deeper into the forest he walked, until he stumbled upon a stone altar glowing with runes. A voice echoed: 'The heir of Merlin returns.' Before Harry could react, a burst of silver light enveloped him. When he awoke, he was no longer in his time, but in the age of the founders of Hogwarts. There stood Godric Gryffindor himself, blade in hand, smiling. 'We've been expecting you, Harry Potter.'